•PYREX® BRAND
OVEN-TABLE
GLASSWARE

1 COMPLETE CASSEROLE
Use it for delicious stews, hot-pots, for stewing fruit, anything requiring slow, even cooking. Serve vegetables in it—keep them piping-hot at table.

2 BOTTOM HALF. Without the lid, the bottom half is perfect for shepherd's pie, milk puddings, baked apples—you'll think of lots more!

3 THE LID. Use it for cooking snacks like baked stuffed tomatoes. It's a perfect serving dish, too.

"THE most useful thing I've ever had in my kitchen!" That's what housewives say about this 'Pyrex' brand casserole. The lid is one dish—the base is another. Put them together and you have a perfectly-fitting casserole. And it costs only 6/-. Think of the economy—in cupboard space and money!

This lovely oven-table glassware cooks food to perfection. Gently the clear glass absorbs the heat, passing it on evenly and steadily to the food inside. There's no fear of drying up or frizzling. Food is rich in its own juices and flavour, perfectly cooked, and goes straight to the table looking doubly tempting in the gleaming glass. No dishing-up, no waste, no saucepans to be washed up. And second helpings are as hot as first ones!

Treat yourself to this lovely ovenware that's so economical, so labour-saving, and that brings you lots of compliments on your cooking! Your local shop has 'Pyrex' brand oven-table glassware—plenty of choice now.

"My family love asking friends to meals," says Mrs. E. B. of Holland Park, W. 11

"And I love entertaining them! It's really no trouble with my 'Pyrex' brand oven-ware. There's no dreadful, flurried dishing-up—the meal is out of the oven and on to the table in a twinkling! And it always looks so attractive!"

Take pride in your gifted child

BUT TAKE CARE TO GUARD
THOSE GIFTS, TOO...

TO be the parents of a gifted child is to know real pride; pride in your child's achievements, pride in each new success.

But, as parents, you, too, have a part to play in forming your child's future. Gifted children are usually the most sensitive, the most highly strung. They live at a higher pitch than other children; their store of nervous energy is constantly in danger of being overdrawn.

Those bouts of listlessness or nervous irritability, the sudden tantrums, the moody idling in chairs—they are all signs of one thing. The child has spent that nervous energy too quickly; there is nothing to fall back on.

Your duty is to see that this doesn't happen; to see that the child gets needed extra nourishment. And the ideal way to do that is with Horlicks.

Horlicks is so valuable for children because it contains, in an easily digestible form, the extra nourishment that their bodies need. Give it at bedtimes—and mealtimes, too—and then you'll know that you are helping to build the reserves of stamina that all growing, highly-strung children must have.

Start your child on Horlicks tonight.

Ebe Bath Powder has nothing in common with those all-too-brilliantly-coloured soda crystals which masquerade as bath salts under a fancy name and a 'perfume' that takes your breath away! Ebe bath powder (in whichever of its romantic forms you buy it) softens bath water . . . instantly . . . to a silky voluptuousness in which the soap practically purrs as it lathers! Water as soft as this gives your skin an exhilarating pore-deep cleansing all over. Ebe scents bath water—with subtly attractive perfume that men are beginning to discover is Night-scented Stock . . . And Ebe tins the water . . . just for fun . . . into whichever romantic hue your mood dictates. Treat yourself to an Ebe Bath—and see!

A superb Dent's glove with a skin-supple fit

A UNIQUE GLOVE BY DENT'S, in soft brown cape with an all-wool lining in a very practical pull-on style. The "Double V" wrists give you increased comfort, and the inner facing of leather turns over smartly at the cuff.

Seventy-two separate processes go into the making of these gloves by Dent's, and the leather is so treated that it can only stretch across the glove—and then to a precise extent. This means that after years of use you'll find these gloves are as comfortable and good-looking as new.

In fact, a pair of Dent's gloves can be a joy for practically ever!

THE SECRET OF "HIDDEN FIT"

Enough "stretch" is worked into the width of your glove to let it expand exactly to your own glove size. But however often you pull it on or off, a Dent's glove can never stretch lengthways beyond its correct length.

SPARE 5 MINUTES A DAY FOR FIGURE AND FITNESS

Simple Self-massage invention will soon have you looking and feeling years younger

You can have a slim, trim figure—you can regain the light step of youth without wearing yourself out with physical jerks. Massage is the key—massage of the vital muscles of the abdomen, on whose strength and tone your figure, carriage and digestion depend. Now a simple self-massage invention—the Rallie Health Belt—makes it easy to give yourself the benefits of abdominal massage.

READ WHAT THE EXPERTS SAY

"Ingenious appliance... affords gentle massage to the abdominal muscles" says The Lancet. "Should prove invaluable to the man or woman of middle age whose figure has begun to spread" says The Medical World.

CHARIVARIA

EXPLAINING that the effects engineer has a worrying job, a radio article points out that he gets very little credit for it. It must be disconcerting to find that his thunder is always being stolen.

Eastern Germany's five-hundred-thousand-strong police force is fully equipped with tommy guns, mortars, armoured cars and tanks. The authorities are stated to be pointing with pride to the steps they are taking to stop all this petty pilfering and shoplifting.

Kind Hearts and Simple Faith

"Mr. M—— was a well known personality in the district. He was a farmer of repute, and came of a long line of ancestors."

Parish magazine

A writer says his idea of a rest and a change is to go into the country for a picnic and forget everything. Including the thing for opening bottles with!

Two films have lately been released dealing with inter-planetary travel. The publicity writers will sadly disappoint us if they fail to claim that these films are packed with stars.

THE Printing Trade Dispute is, at the time of going to press, still unsettled, and we are compelled once again to present a diminished PUNCH. Extra pages, over and above the normal quota, will be provided as soon as working conditions make this possible.

"The President of the Board of Trade, in a written reply, says that only the chairman of the Furniture Development Council, Sir David Waley, receives a salary, which was fixed by the Board of Trade at £,000 a year."—Suffolk paper

It's a matter of principle, presumably.

A novel written by a London taxi driver is to be published this autumn. The blurb should make a point of saying that the author has carefully avoided all the more hackneyed themes.

LEND NO MONEY TO THE LORD CHAMBERLAIN

IF I am to believe half of what I hear—a premise that I am loath to accept—the besetting problem of the housewife is that of making ends meet. Whether for fish or furbelows, the poor dear is for ever scratching pathetically in the dust at the bottom of her purse. Far be it from me to play the traitor to my sex (m.) but I do feel that in other days wives may have shown more address in going to meet this problem half-way.

I have before me a letter* written by one such to her husband some three hundred and thirty-five years ago. I admit that the lady in question was married to a man who in any case was practically rolling in the stuff, but that is not the point: it is the approach that counts, the subtle blending of quiet determination and smooth diplomacy.

"My sweet Life," she begins endearingly. "Now that I have declared to You my mind, for the settling of your Estate, I suppose that it were best for me to bethink what allowance were best for me, for considering what care I have ever had of your Estate, and how respectfully I dealt with those which both by laws of God, Nature & civil Policy, Wit, Religion, Government and Honesty, you my Dear are bound to; I pray and beseech You to grant to me Your most kind and loving Wife the sum of 1600£ per Ann: quarterly to be paid."

Few letter-writers, perhaps, could improve on that. But she could and promptly did. Mentioning casually that this is merely an allowance for Apparel, she requires £600 added yearly for the performance of Charitable Works, "& these things I would not neither will be accountable for."

At one blow she establishes a moral ascendancy, ensuring that by any attempt at hedging the shrinking bread-winner would put himself inevitably in the wrong.

Swiftly following up her advantage, she asks for two Gentlewomen, explaining that two are necessary "lest one should be Sick, also believe that it is an indecent thing for a Gentlewoman to stand mumping alone when God hath blessed their Lord and Lady with a great Estate."

Occasionally she is content with the direct assault, without frills—"Also when I ride hunting or hawking or travel from one House to another I will have them attending, so for each of these said Women I must and will have a Horse"—but usually the moral suasion is slipped in as well. Thus, when travelling she will [sic] be allowed several Carriages, to ensure "not pestering my things with my Womens nor theirs with Chambermaids nor theirs with Washmaids . . . Also that it is indecent to croud up myself with my Gentleman Usher in my Coach, I will have him a convenient Horse to attend me either in city or country . . ."

We are now at the foot of the second page, and in the nicest way in the world the lady has asked, besides those items already mentioned, for three Horses for her own Saddle ("that none shall dare to lend or borrow, none lend but I, none borrow but You"), six or eight Gentlemen, two Coachmen, two well appointed Coaches of four Horses each, several Carriages, four

POPULAR MISCONCEPTIONS: KNOCKING-OFF TIME AT HARWELL

Footmen and an unspecified number of Landresses, as well as "twenty Gowns apparel, 6 of them excellent good ones, 8 of them for the country and 6 other of them very excellent good ones."

One page remains, and it starts off with a bang.

"Also I would have to put in my Purse 2000£ & 200£ and so You to pay my Debts. Also I would have 8000£ to buy my Jewels and 6000£ for a Pearl Chain."

Let any who care translate that into terms of modern currency. The writer (her husband was a Baron, and Barons were worth something in those days) sweeps on with unshaken nerve.

"Now seeing I have been and am so reasonable unto You, I pray You to find my Children Apparel and their Schooling and all my Servants Men & Women their Wages."

"Also I will have all my Houses furnished & all my Lodging Chambers to be suited with all such Furniture as is fit . . ." (including silver warming Pans and cupboards of Plate).

"Also", she says, slipping right in under his guard, "my desire is that You wou'd pay your Debts, build up Ashby House and purchase Lands, and lend no money (as you love God) to the Ld: Chamberlain."

There remains, beside some rather personal remarks concerning the Lord Chamberlain and his family, only the peroration, a brief but telling sentence to round the whole thing off, and this is it:

"So now that I have declared to You my mind what I wou'd have and what I wou'd not have, I pray You when You be an Earl to allow me 1000£ more than now I desired & double attendance."

Your loving Wife,
Eliz: Compton."

I wish I had his lordship's reply, but alas! I have not. Perhaps he was stunned into silence. It is reassuring, however, to know that he still felt able to face the prospect of becoming an Earl and actually did so within two or three years. I will wager it cost him a £ or Two.

PLANTING MISTLETOE

LET the old tree be the gold tree,
Hand up the silver seed;
Let the hoary tree be the glory-tree,
To shine forth at need,
At mirth-time, at dearth-time,
Gold bough and milky bead.

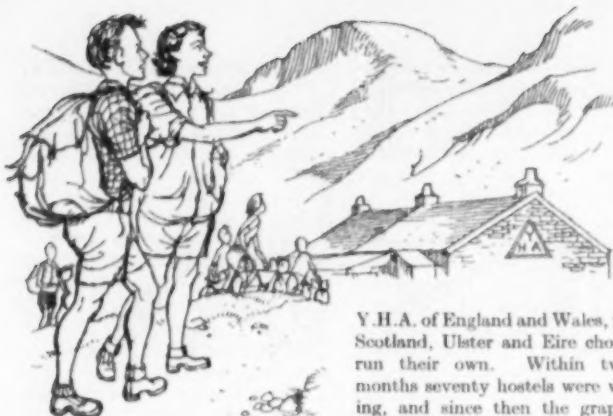

For the root's going and the fruit's going,
Soon it will bloom no more:
The growth's arrested, the yaffle's nested
Deep in the hollow core;
Over the grasses thinly passes
The shade so dark before.

Take a few sprigs of the new twigs,
If any such you find;
Don't lose them, but use them,
Keeping a good kind
To be rooting and fruiting
When this is old and blind.

So the tragic tree is the magic tree,
Running the whole range
Of growing and blowing
And suffering change,
Then buying, by dying,
The wonderful and strange.

ADVENTURE STORY

YOUTH HOSTELS

THERE were three of them, two boys and a girl, eating hard-boiled eggs in a corner of the field. Bicycles and rucksacks were propped against the hedge. We spoke of travel, and I said something gloomy about hotel bills.

"Oh, hotels," they said, as if they were speaking of Montgolfier's fire balloon. "We stay in youth hostels. It costs us four-and-six a night each for supper, bed and breakfast, and less if we choose to burn our own sausages."

"But are the hostels in the places you want to go to?" I asked.

"Well, there are over three hundred of them spaced about, and England and Wales aren't very big."

It all began with an imaginative German schoolmaster named Richard Schirrmann, who felt that inns were too expensive for many of his youngsters who would otherwise go wandering. He persuaded other schoolmasters to put mattresses in class-rooms during the summer holidays, and in 1910 he opened the first youth hostel proper, in an old castle. By 1914 there were two hundred hostels in Germany, by 1928 over two thousand.

Considering the expansion of the model, we were rather slow to follow, for in this country the first hostel was not opened until 1930. In the same year the Youth Hostels Association was formed, covering Great Britain; later it became the Y.H.A. of England and Wales, when Scotland, Ulster and Eire chose to run their own. Within twelve months seventy hostels were working, and since then the graph of membership has risen steadily, except for a brief dip during this last war, and for another, now leveling out, in 1949, which was a natural result of too great pressure during holiday months. Owing to housing difficulties the increase in hostels lagged behind that in members, so that instead of the target of one bed for every eight members there is at present only one for every fifteen.

The aims of the Y.H.A. are the same as those of Richard Schirrmann, to provide cheap accommodation and to promote a livelier individual interest in the countryside. Finance, though a constant headache for the Association, has never proved insuperable. The National Trust has lent houses, the Carnegie Trust and other funds have given grants, and the Ministry of Education may contribute up to half the cost of a new hostel. Once founded it must be self-supporting; this remarkable achievement is due to the goodwill of members, who do their own housework and provide working-parties for repairs. To bring hostellers together there are local groups, often attached to big cities, where they can meet for discussion; in this way the Y.H.A. preserves a keen life of its own and avoids becoming merely a chain of convenient dormitories. Even if it were only that, it would still be nationally important, but as things are its two hundred thousand members form a powerful nucleus determined to keep the best of the country unspoiled and worth exploring. The Juniors, between sixteen and twenty-one, comprise the biggest section, and are our next generation of citizens. On the top level the views of the Association are listened to with respect where rural amenities are concerned, and a number of kindred societies are represented on its National Council.

Hostel buildings range from cottages, through farms, watermills and vicarages, to mansions and, occasionally, to new premises. The smallest takes twelve, the largest one hundred and fifty. The larger are usually more comfortable and economical, while the smaller remain truer to the Y.H.A.'s original ideals. A loss of "mateyness" on the one hand, a fairly stark simplicity on the other. Two schools of thought continue to debate the issue hotly.

There are mercifully few rules, and no age limit for adults. The annual subscription is two shillings for Juveniles (five to sixteen), five shillings for Juniors and ten shillings for Seniors (above twenty-one). You must arrive "under your own steam," a condition often literally carried out; in other words on foot, by cycle or by canoe. Alcohol is barred, but there are no bans of race or creed. In busy months you must book and pay ahead, and meals must always be arranged in advance. Hostels close at ten, and lights are out at ten-thirty. On arrival you report to the Warden, a permanent, salaried host who will tell you whether you are a sweeper, a potato-peeler, a table-layer or a washer-up. In theory three days are the most you can stay in one hostel, but, if bookings allow, you can generally stay longer. A cotton sleeping-bag is insisted on, to save laundry. Planning your holiday is simplified by a businesslike handbook and a map on which little scarlet triangles stand out invitingly, looking like edible fungi. . . .

The hostel Mr. Punch's Artist has drawn was in Oxfordshire, near the Thames, in a Friends' Meeting House. The men's dormitory was lined with double bunks, and the dining-room had long tables and a gas-stove (those who see to their own food are called "self-cookers," a description sometimes not inaccurate in the case of younger pioneers). Hostels open at five, and, arriving an hour later, we found a stack of bicycles, and a "House Full" notice pinned on the gate. In the dining-room a knot of youths was listening to a young Frenchman who had picked fruit for six weeks and was now intelligently discovering England. He was a student, from Dijon; and, the talk turning to wine, a schoolboy from the Midlands startled him with first-hand views on the chemistry of fermentation. Boys and girls, mostly in shorts, drifted in and added their stories of the road. Some had come from Stratford, and had been delightedly to Shakespeare, others had combed through Oxford and were going on towards the South Downs. Everyone talked, yet all seemed eager to listen. A few older hostellers joined us too. About seven the tables were laid, and at a summons from the kitchen, where the Warden's son was chef, we went and carried back an honest supper. I sat next to a middle-aged secretary from Yorkshire, an enthusiast for hostels, in which she spent week-ends as well as holidays. She goes alone, but said she finds new friends everywhere. On my other side was a charming family, a mother, father and their son of ten, who were cycling forty miles a day and appearing to enjoy every inch of it. Afterwards, when we went and chatted with the Warden, and noted how kindly and helpfully he dealt with the stream of young people that came to him for information ("Where shall I put the scraps?" "What do the steamers cost?" "Any chance of getting in at Basingstoke?") we had no doubts left that here was a really bright spot in the ancient patchwork of our funny social fabric.

It seems almost too good to be true that the whole country, and particularly the most remote and exciting parts of it, should thus be made accessible to anyone with a few shillings in his pocket. If you were an adventurous boy would you rather have a boarding-house and cinemas and endless wet promenades or, say, the thrill of making your own way to an isolated cottage in Cumberland with the magnificent title of "The Black Sail Hostel," where you would be greeted as a blood-brother? We live in an age that is rapidly pulping us into a mechanized herd, but if we still care anything for individuals—people who will choose their own interests, and find them in nature, and stoutly decline to be spoon-fed with mass entertainment—then it seems clear that youth hostels are very important indeed. And apart from Uncle Joe's iron-girt pleasaunce they open up all Europe for absurdly small sums. ERIC KEOWIS

APPROACH it from Aldersgate,
Approach it from Moorgate,
Come up from St. Paul's
To my castle.

In those broad acres at the lunch hour
You will find me mapping out my farm.

I think I am a Briton
The Romans allowed to cultivate corn
Outside the corner bastion of the wall.

But come to my castle—which is a ruined warehouse—
And I will show you the view:
Where Suetonius planned that bastion
And gave me rights against the wall.

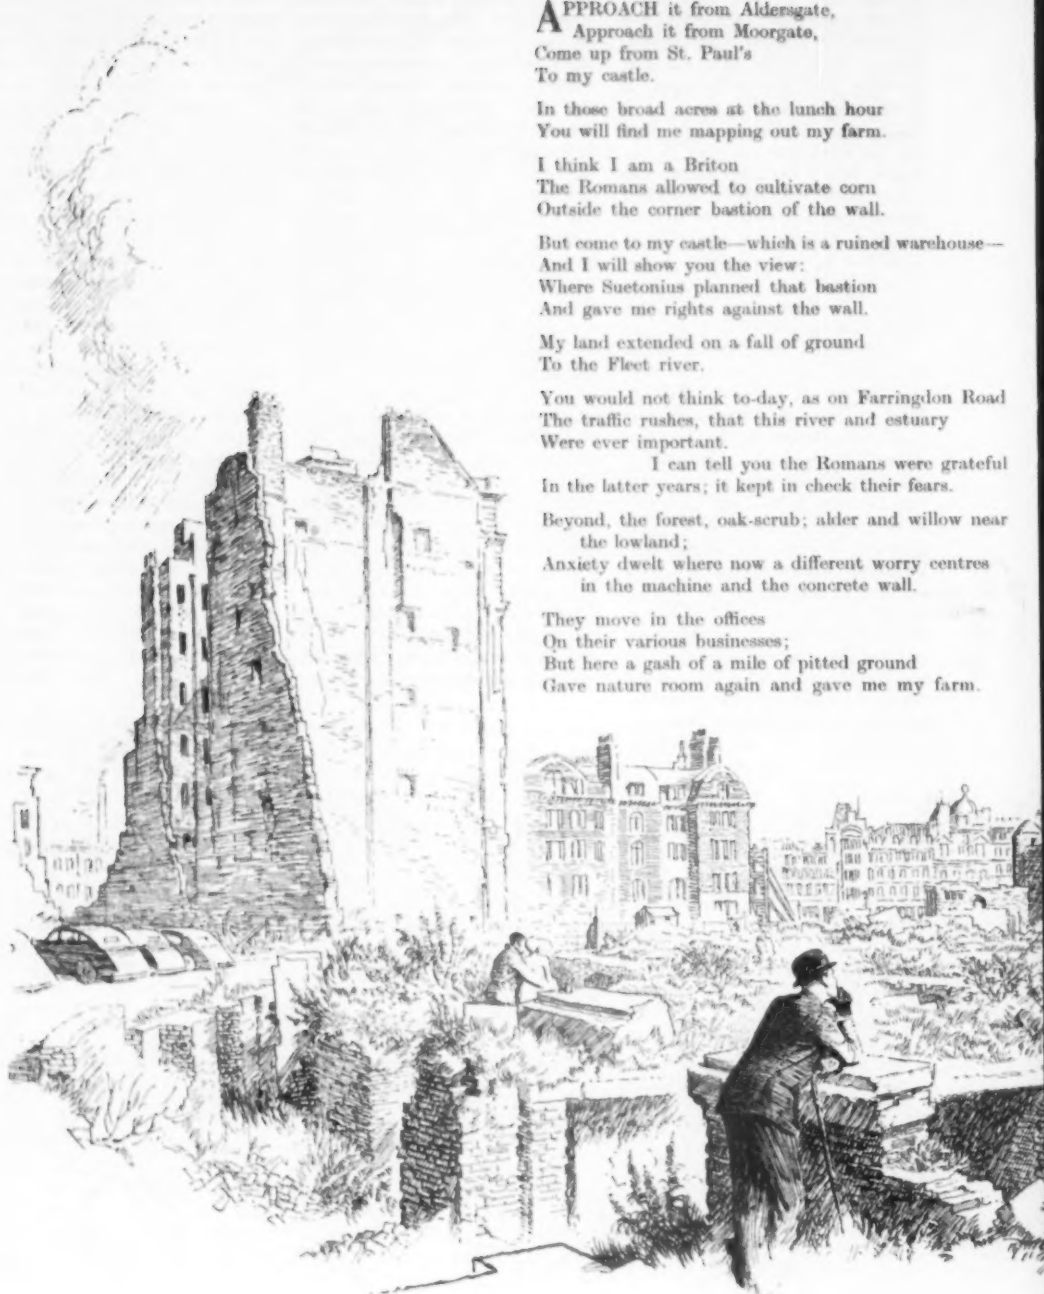

My land extended on a fall of ground
To the Fleet river.

You would not think to-day, as on Farringdon Road
The traffic rushes, that this river and estuary
Were ever important.

I can tell you the Romans were grateful
In the latter years; it kept in check their fears.

Beyond, the forest, oak-scrub; alder and willow near the lowland;
Anxiety dwelt where now a different worry centres
in the machine and the concrete wall.

They move in the offices
On their various businesses;
But here a gash of a mile of pitted ground
Gave nature room again and gave me my farm.

HOURS

For at the lunch hour gaily my spirit
Wanders around here and climbs the ruined shells
And has a width for its eye.

All surveyors I shun.

But they come and the new is planned.
When that time comes I will remember
The times I scanned the stars from ruined shells, Seemed to gather a pained and cold meaning that was worth it

Because it was meaning:

Not the hectic streets
And the hectic voices
And the fun alleys
And the faces: not that,
But nature, the vicar of God—to borrow Milton—
Breaking free with wideness like that of the Outer Hebrides

And nature pluckily redeclaring herself with purple willow-herb and bright yellow coltsfoot.

So had my farm willow-herb in the early days;
Down in one corner I marshalled it, for it is a weed,

You must admit it is a weed, a lovely weed.

You have never had a farm. You love the gaily purple pageantry of weeds.

I do, my office and my inner-suburban garden are my limits.

Let not the surveyor murder my lunch hours.

A PROPHECY

THE week after next an amateur will play a small part with our repertory company, and I know exactly what is going to happen. He is going to be asked to share my dressing-room.

My dressing-room is always used as a depository, because it is too handily situated at the top of the stairs. People wheel enormous baskets into it, full of moths, and never come back for them. In one corner there is a bass drum stencilled HARRY'S RHYTHM, which was used as a barrage in Journey's End before I joined the company. The window-ledge is lined with whisky bottles, some containing a solution of gravy-browning and some containing spiders. A rolled Axminster carpet is propped against a wall, and periodically slumps to the floor like a body. There is also what I take to be an antiquated contrivance for making the sound of wind, and the inside of a grand piano.

In the midst of all this I crouch on the spindly chair, peering into my mirror, with all my wardrobe on two hooks, and my feet on the handle of the wind-machine. And a very glamorous picture I make, I shouldn't be surprised.

The function of this amateur will be to poke his head through the door down Left towards the end of the third act, looking like a chauffeur, say "All ready now, sir," and vanish. On the Monday night, an hour and a half before the curtain is due to rise, he is going to hurry through the stage-door, wearing a duffle-coat. Under one arm he will have the current Stage, and under the other he will have a make-up box of awe-inspiring proportions.

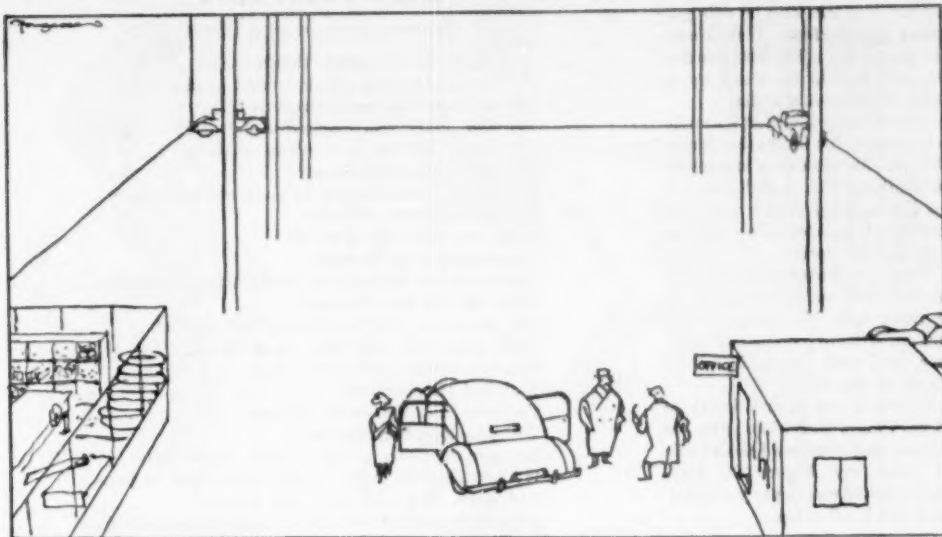

When I enter the dressing-room an hour later, still limp from dress rehearsal, I shall find him sitting on my chair. In my mirror I shall see his face, which will be painted the colour of raw liver. The rickety cigar-box containing my half-dozen grubby stumps of grease-paint will be stuck away in a corner, and his enormous shiny steel cabinet will stand before him, opened in all directions, with drawers, trays, ledges, cubby-holes, sections, trap-doors, divisions, lids, and a bit that comes up like a lift. In this complicated honeycomb I shall observe a dazzling range of gleaming grease-paints, each stick bedded comfortably in its allotted niche, in numerical order, a good ninety per cent of them in their original Cellophane.

While I arrange a seat for myself on the bass drum, and place my cigar-box humbly before my shaving-mirror, he will greet me heartily, and engage me in conversation about Strindberg.

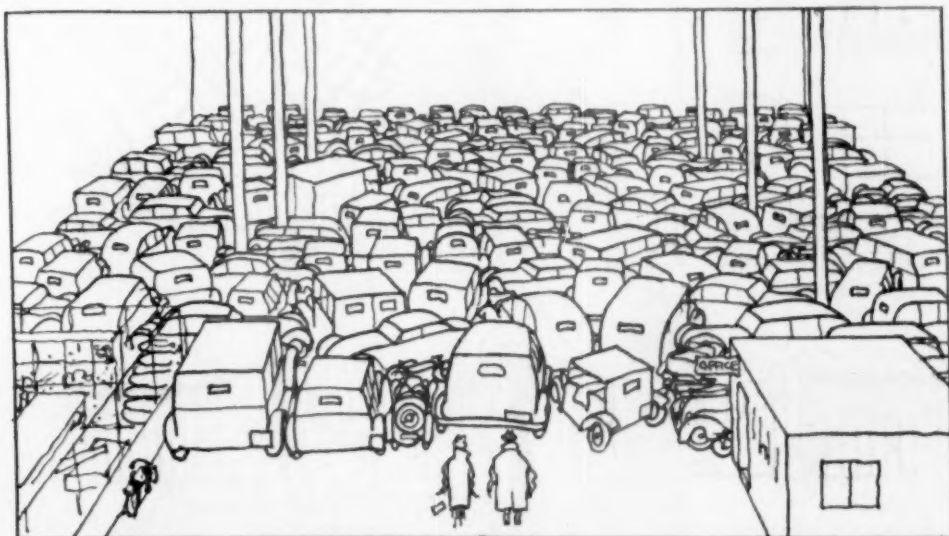

Stumbling about in the confined space trying to get into my first-act clothes I shall mutter non-committal responses while he outlines the plot of a play he has written, describes a recent performance he gave as Macbeth and deplors the cultural decay of the West End theatre. I shall try to look through

"I had to wait a year for them."

"Just for the evening? Very good, sir—I'll put it up in the far corner, sir, all ready for you to drive away when you . . .

come back . . . !"

my lines, and he will gargle. I shall seek my monocle, and he will have ground it underfoot. I shall compose myself for a last few minutes' rest, and he will be seized by an attack of nervous hysteria.

I shall assure him that his make-up is perfect, his intonation impeccable, and his chances of missing his cue absolutely nil. I shall help him into his leggings (which won't be seen), and I shall send for a light ale to steady his nerves.

Then I shall shake his hand, and wish him luck, and leave him pacing the room with his speech in one hand and a damp powder-puff in the other, and seek the more restful turmoil of the wings.

I know it will be just like that: and yet I know that when he makes his trembling entrance I shall smile and cross my fingers for him. Because it will seem only yesterday that I did it all myself.

BACK ROOM JOYS

PEOPLE BEHIND US IN A QUEUE

ONE of the pleasanter things we do
Is counting the people behind us in a queue.
While we are the last, ourselves only,
We feel public and exposed and lonely;
The smug ones in front seem to glare,
We are obviously inferior
So we talk rather loudly to show we don't care.
We are instantly cheerier
With any new arrival at all;
The margin may be small
But we are not the last, no longer the latest, the least.
Soon the tail has increased;
We are secure, well buttressed, well padded,
And, when still more have been added,
We turn round and count
And find they amount
To more than the people in front.
We, who long bore the brunt,
Are now definitely in the top half of the class:
We can afford to relax, serenely allow time to pass.
And if we, now and then, also glare
It's only to gloat over how many more there are there.

THEATRE SKETCHBOOK

GUARANTEED INDELIBLE

SHE enters the ironmonger's shop in front of me, elegantly dressed in a light print dress, and it surprises me, when she speaks to the salesman, that she is not the perfection of charm I had confidently expected her to be.

What she wants is some black paint-stuff for painting a gate. It must be black and it must not come off.

You cannot trust anybody or anything nowadays, she says; the last stuff she bought washed off in the very first shower of rain; it was, in fact, an absolute waste of money and it was disgraceful that anybody should sell such stuff.

The salesman is sorry. Had madam bought it at his shop?

Madam cannot remember where she bought it.

He suggests that perhaps the wood was wet, or it was raining when the paint was applied. It cannot be guaranteed, he says, unless the material is dry and it is not raining.

He has the very thing, he says, and takes a can off a shelf behind him.

Will it preserve the wood absolutely against rot?

He assures madam that it will. And it will not wash off!

He promises that it will not.

It is, in fact, absolutely indelible?

It is—he repeats the words—absolutely indelible.

She removes the cork and smells the stuff.

He begs her to be careful, lest a drop should splash into her eye.

She replaces the cork and says she will buy the can.

The salesman says "Excuse me, madam, is the cork absolutely firm?"

She says "Of course. I put it back myself."

Can he wrap it up and send it for her?

No, she will take it; she has a car outside.

He is sure, she inquires again, that it is absolutely indelible?

He repeats the assurance.

I feel sympathy with the salesman and I say to him, when the lady has left the shop, that success in his job calls for rare good manners and patience.

He smiles and admits that perhaps some customers are a little more difficult than others.

And here, unexpectedly, is the lady back in the shop again.

Her light print dress, alas, is no longer the spotless and elegant costume that it was a minute or two earlier. It is evident that the cork had not been properly replaced.

"What does one use," she asks, "to get this stain out?"

(PLACE, NOT TIME)

IF I were one-and-twenty again with a lifetime's work to seek

I would take a boat by the Tail o' the Bank and follow the setting sun;

I would go west and west again for a week and then a week

And never a halt or a backward look till the long, long trek was done.

I would pass the bergs off bleak Belle-Isle and the slow St. Lawrence reach,

The queenly presence of Montreal, Quebec's enchanted ground,

Ottawa's sky-wide acres and Nipigon's pine-girt beach, Banff where the Bow comes roaring down and the Rockies gather round.

I would follow the trail by Castle Mountain over the Great Divide,

Down by the drop of the Kicking Horse and the Beaver Valley bend,

By Revelstoke and by Sicamous and along Lake Shuswap side

Till I came to the Fraser River and it sang me down to the end.

To meet at last by a second sea in the jaws of the Lion Gate

Vancouver set on her bays and bluffs in the kind Pacific air,

Where the ships come in from the ends of the earth and the box-cars load their freight;

And there I would find me a job of work and I'd cast anchor there.

A job of work—and a hundred hills that dazzle the climber's eyes,

The seaward beaches hot in the sun in sight of the landward snow,

Deer to hunt in the twilight woods with a twelve-point head for prize,

Trout in the Capilano. Can you beat Vancouver? No!

British Columbia, that's the name—or short and sweet "B.C."

Where Hope says "This is the place for you," and faint's the heart would doubt it.

Hills and forests and suns and snows—and your pile to make, maybe.

That's where I'd go if I were young . . . Young Britain, what about it?

LAMENT OF AN IDLE DEMON

IT'S quiet in Hell just now, it's very tame,
The devils and the damned alike lie snoring.
Just a faint smell of sulphur, not much flame;
The human souls come here and find it boring.

Satan, the poor old Puritan, sits there
Emitting mocking laughter once a minute;

Idly he scans a page of Baudelaire
And wonders how he once saw evil in it.

He sips his brimstone at the Demons' Club
(His one amusement now he's superseded)
And keeps complaining to Beelzebub
That men make hotter hells than ever he did.

Tinned ham may now be imported "as a further step in the liberalisation of inter-European trade."

But what about liberalising us in Britain? What about letting us have Marsh Ham, cured and matured in the old way, with an aroma and flavour that made it world famous?

The Midland Curing Trade that gave us our hams gives us also the famous shoulder-belly bacon (streaky to you) and fine fresh home-grown pork.

Let us stop spending our money abroad on less tasty foods and eat our own food grown and produced the way we like it. There'd be enough for all if the trade were freed.

Did you know that 330 animals a week pass through London Airport at Heath Row en route for destinations in all corners of the world? And that existing facilities for their reception are utterly inadequate? While the animals are in England, even if only for a few short hours or days, they urgently need the heated accommodation, quarantine facilities and medical treatment which are at present not available. To meet this great need the R.S.P.C.A. have accepted the responsibility of erecting an Animal Reception Centre at Heath Row Airport. ## ALUMINIUM

ADORNED with rubies and sapphires from the Mogök mines of Burma this Shan woman prepares her food. These jewels and the common clay of her ornate bowl are but a few of the many minerals containing aluminium. Though first isolated in 1826, it was not until 1886 that its production became commercially practicable. Most of the world's aluminium is now produced by dissolving an ore named bauxite in molten cryolite, a mineral obtained from Greenland, and passing an electric current through the solution. In combination with other metals such as magnesium or copper, aluminium forms light alloys, some of which, though only about one third of the weight of steel, are just as strong and do not rust. The famous statue of Eros in Piccadilly Circus, one of the earliest large aluminium castings, shows no signs of corrosion after 40 years' exposure to London smoke.

One of the largest factories producing wrought aluminium and its alloys in the form of sheet, strip and extrusions is the I.C.I. works at Wunarlwydd in South Wales. These go to help in the production of all manner of finished articles from saucepans to aeroplanes, scaffolding poles to ashtrays, motor car parts to egg cups.

MAKERS OF HISTORY

When industrial science was only in its adolescence Fodens were pioneers in steam-propelled road transport. Then, as now, the history of human progress was being written, not in the precincts of courts or in the tumult of battles, but in the workshops and the laboratories. In this, the age of the highly developed internal combustion engine, the name Foden is still the most significant in its field.

Foden continues to make history . .

GIVE ME THE Buk SHAVING METHOD

every time"

"I don't adopt new methods without good reason. And I wasn't entirely sold on Electric Dry Shavers until a doctor, who was buying a BUK, told me how its shaving action protects the skin (mine is easily irritated). He said the Medical Profession are all in favour of this method. So it seemed good sense to take to BUK shaving."

"Everything about the BUK pleases me. The convenience and efficiency—just plug in and get busy: no water, soap, mess; a quick clean shave anywhere, any time, with no after-soreness or risk of a cut. I haven't had such a smooth face since I first started shaving. Then the masterly simplicity and reliability of the instrument—no motor, nothing to go wrong. Look at the list of exclusive BUK features alongside. Note the last one. The BUK's practically the only British Electric Shaver that doesn't cause Radio or Television interference."

BUK FEATURES

World-patented 5-to-1 head, with 300 shaving edges, making 6,000 cutting strokes per minute. Shaves at below skin-line, yet contains don't touch skin. No motor. Failproof, shaverproof. Nothing to go wrong in years of use. On-off switch on shaver. Voltage control for correct speed. Tidy-trap, shaver brush. You can shave with your eyes shut. Negligible electricity consumption. No Radio or Television Interference.

GOING UP TO TAKE IT DOWN

Scale in industrial water systems can cause any amount of trouble. Choked pipes must be dismantled, seized valves freed, and water heaters cleaned — there is never any lack of work for the maintenance staff. Many of these troubles can be avoided before they start, simply by treating the water with Calgon (which is Albright & Wilson's sodium metaphosphate). A few parts of Calgon in a million of water will prevent scale or stop corrosion. The advice of Albright & Wilson's Technical Service Department is available for the asking.
